

LONG ISLAND PLASTIC SURGICAL GROUP WALKS WITH PATIENTS AND RAISES NEARLY $5k FOR BREAST CANCER AWARENESS

October 2007 Jones Beach, NY

(Jones Beach, NY) – Team Long Island Plastic Surgical Group (LIPSG) recently raised nearly $5,000 to fight breast cancer in the American Cancer Society's Making Strides Against Breast Cancer walk. The team of more than 40 walkers included: patients who are breast cancer survivors and their families, doctors, physicians' assistants, nurses, and other LIPSG staff and their families. Team LIPSG joined more than 60,000 other cancer fighters in the five-mile trek on the Jones Beach boardwalk this past Sunday to raise funds and awareness in the fight against breast cancer.

"We were honored to walk with our patients," said Dr. Barry K. Douglas, a partner in the Long Island Plastic Surgical Group, who participated in the event. "And our patients were excited to join our team, carry our banner and be part of something so wonderful."

This was the first year Long Island Plastic Surgical Group, of Garden City, participated in this event. The team proudly raised a total of $4,800. LIPSG staff raised nearly $1,000 to support its patients and Long Island Plastic Surgical Group's physicians generously matched all staff donations.

All the board certified plastic surgeons of Long Island Plastic Surgical Group are experts in breast cancer reconstruction. They perform hundreds of breast reconstruction operations each year. LIPSG is the largest and longest continuously running plastic surgery practice in the country.
